. A: I don't use Windows and I've never used the software you're talking about, so please forgive my ignorance. Your question is "how can I find my activation key with windows?" I found this:

Windows activation key. A keygen tool - how to find, activate, or generate a Microsoft Windows Activation Key for your computer or computer. Q:

Unable to match between two files - Grep returns No match I have the following two files in the current

directory: file1.txt AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAA

BBBBBBBBBBBBBBBBBBB CCCFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFFF

file2.txt BBBBBBBBBBBBBBBBBBBB

HHHHHHHHHHHHHHH AAAAAHHHHHHHHHHH

I then run the following command to compare the two files: `grep -F -f file1.txt file2.txt` But the result I get is No match. What am I doing wrong here? A:

You don't need -F here. If you try that command on the command line, that should work. It doesn't work because grep is a tool that reads a stream of text and it can't store anything in a "content cache" (it needs to match the whole stream at once to see if there's any match at all). With -F, it's reading each line one by one from the first file, and while it's searching for matching lines in the second file, it stops reading the first file; when it finds a match, it prints it, and resumes reading the first file for the next search. Q: FTP transfer of database files fails I am trying to transfer my database files from my development workstation to a live web server, however I am encountering a problem. I have used the following code to implement a file transfer:

string remotePath;
string sourceFile =
"D:\DatabaseBackups\FileToTransfer.sql"; string destFile =
"D:\DataBaseBackups\FileToTransfer.sql"; string
user; string password; try { ftp.ControlStream = true;
ftp.Connect(remotePath); ftp.Credentials =
username + ":" + password; ftp.command("mode
conq") ;
