A phase-locked loop (PLL) is a feedback control loop in which a controlled variable is adjusted until the variable has a constant phase relationship with respect to a reference. Typically, a PLL is a circuit that is used to generate an output signal that is locked to a reference signal. Typically, the reference signal is a periodic signal and the output signal is a modulated version of the reference signal. The output signal is generated using an oscillator which is controlled by a feedback loop to produce a signal with a constant phase relationship to the reference signal. Generally, the oscillator is tuned to the reference signal to obtain the constant phase relationship.
