The NCPO will be responsible for organising a general election to elect a new National Assembly after the country returns to democracy. The monarchy had been stripped from power and the military took control in a coup on May 22, 2014. The Election Commission has yet to announce the date for the general election. A news conference on Sunday was attended by the NCPO's administration chief Gen Werachon Sukhondhapatipak, deputy defense minister Brig Gen Chumpol Intarasuk, secretary-general of the national security council Lt Gen Werachon Sukondhapatipak, and Chumpol's deputy Lt Gen Kampol Thiratchai. The meeting focused on the security, economy, and political situations in the country. Chumpol said the National Assembly election would be about "peace and harmony", adding that the election must take place peacefully. The government would release the list of candidates to run in the election to the NCPO in the near future. Candidates would be submitted to the NCPO within the next three days, Chumpol said. Once the NCPO had confirmed the candidates, they could be sent to the Election Commission, he said. Chumpol said members of the bureaucracy would have to wait for the NCPO to release candidates for electoral districts before submitting their names for election. On the economy, Chumpol said the government would prepare to declare a budget for next year when the budget for this year had been declared. Brig Chiranuch Antaratarkorn, deputy minister of the economy, said a total of 3 trillion baht would be
