The program will open the file of your choice with the PatternText editor and automatically create a search-replace string with the click of a button. The included version has a regular expression search mode that the user can use to find text with one of the many well-known regular expressions. The program automatically inserts the string containing the text the user has found. To use regular expression search mode the user can choose the regular expression from the menus of the main window and click "Match Mode". Then they can click on the "Next" or "Search" button at the bottom of the window to start finding the text with regular expression or typing in their own text. If the user wishes to type in the regular expression they can use the dialog to build the regular expression or copy and paste it from the file. Once the user has done all they need to change they can click the "Find Mode" button to open the dialog with the text they wish to replace. They can then click on the "Find" button and the program will search and replace all text the user has indicated with their own text. Once all the text the user wants to replace is found they can click the "Replace" button to make the change. The program will now ask if the user wants to replace all instances of that found text. If they press "Yes" all instances of the text will be changed to the new string. The program will keep the old version of the text for the user to view. The user can also change the text they want to replace or find to be in reverse order by clicking the buttons in the menu. Once the user is satisfied with the result they can click on the "Replace/Find" buttons again to replace/find the entire document or just some of the selected text. As with any text editor when the user is done with a file they want to save they can click on the "Save" button. Similar1.
