Aroma is a line of aromatherapy candles from Inhale, a product of SunFire. The sun is set on a busy office day at the old Bank of America branch in the Ogden neighborhood at 36th and Weber Streets. A man in a brown jacket and khaki pants leans over the counter and runs his finger down a page. He looks at something that's typed there and holds up a picture. Then he steps back into the room where the children are waiting. A picture or two are snapped and some money is handed over, with the rare penny going toward school funds. I'm guessing, but I'm not sure. Another week passes, and another group of children is passing on their quest for change, a quest just as quaint as it is futile. It's not quite sure what to make of me. During the course of the day, I'd lie on the sidewalk in front of the bank, read the street signs, play Frisbee with some of the children, or pop up in front of the stop sign at 36th and Weber and watch for cars to get out of the way. Their parents work at a nearby medical office, so I figured I'd make a bit of money by helping them and their children get money from the bank. "That's not fair," one of the children would say. "You're always there when we leave." "It's called'street performance," one of the parents would answer. I couldn't think of a better profession, but I wanted to do something else, and tell stories, both serious 595f342e71
