Although Photoshop has been eclipsed somewhat by other programs, it is still very much the industry standard and will continue to be the standard for many years to come. Reviewing the most common Photoshop editing commands When your goal is to edit an image, start by loading it into Photoshop and creating a new Photoshop file. If you're using Photoshop CS6, the process is even easier because the software offers to bring your image into Photoshop automatically. In this section, you explore the most common image editing tasks. Retouching a subject in a photograph With Photoshop, you can touch up a subject's image in various ways. Here's a list of some of the most common tools for subject retouching in photographs: Move, rotate, and resize: You can move, rotate, and resize a photo — and even distort it (meaning that you can zoom in on an image and move or distort its pixels to see where the image becomes distorted). Blur: You can blur an image to eliminate details that you don't want to show in a subject's face, such as a windshield, or the edge of a tree. You can adjust the amount of blur you apply by using the various Blur tools. You can also add blur by using the Gaussian Blur feature. Extract: You can pull out unwanted items in an image, such as the horizontal line of the lawn and the roof line of the house in the image in Figure 6-2, such as the horizontal line of the lawn and the roof line of the house in Figure 6-2. Sharpen: A photo can look flat and ordinary when you brighten it too much. You can use the Sharpen tools to brighten the image and then blur the result to eliminate edge details. Change the color: In addition to adding color to an image, you can take away color and change the tint, shading, and hue or saturation of any color. You can use the color channels to add more saturation to an image, such as when you take a photo of a color sunset. You can use the channels to eliminate color from a photo or add color to it. You can play with colors by using the Channels menu at the bottom of the image window (see Figure 6-3). A

Society's greatest moral obligation is to provide such things as health and education for all of its people. And yet, "medical care for the poor" is today so unaffordable that the sick and elderly are pushed into living under a bridge or on the streets, while those without enough are left without medicine or refuge. Indeed, the problem is worse than most Americans realize. The International Monetary Fund's Special Data Dissemination Tool shows the share of patients within the developing world who have no medical insurance is increasing faster than previously believed. According to the World Bank's World Health Statistics 2009, for every dollar of developed-world health spending, 2.6 are taken from developing countries; nearly 40 percent of the world's population lives in countries with less than $1,500 a year in per-capita income. The IMS Institute for Healthcare Informatics reports that 80 percent of global health spending flows to those countries. There are two reasons for this discrepancy: People with less money tend to be poorer and sicker in general than wealthier people, especially those who live in developed countries. So, for most of the world's people, health care is an unaffordable luxury. There are alternatives to the system we have. I have outlined some of them here. Still, it is important to realize that, in the developing world, the vast majority of people have no health insurance at all. For them, the last resort is not a government handout, but a visit to a street-side "quack." The International Criminal Court has indicted Osama bin Laden and senior al Qaeda leaders on charges of murder and conspiracy to murder. Here's my question for American readers: Why should American citizens be immune from the same charge? Until now, we've been protected by the rule of law. In a war, the law doesn't distinguish between the United States, Afghanistan and any other country. But now, no matter where you are, you can be prosecuted by the International Criminal Court. Let the world see America for what we are: a country in which anyone at any time can be charged with a crime. We're born free; we're free to die. In much of the developing world, there is no other choice. Richard Grenier is a radio commentator and the co-author of The First Victory, a history of the U.S. invasion of Iraq. Results of a multicenter study of posterolateral lumbar arthrodesis with a CRS/P (collum pedis) artificial disc. A prospective multicenter trial of a novel, all-pedicle, transpedicular CRS/P spacer that stabilizes posterior lumbar spine pathology. To evaluate the safety, efficacy, and radiographic outcomes of the CRS/P spacer in the treatment of degenerative lumbar spine pathology. This spacer system has been developed by the authors for the treatment of posterolateral lumbar pathology. The CRS/P (collum pedis) artificial disc is designed to enhance intervertebral stability, minimize facet joint impingement, and improve segmental lordosis. Patients with lumbar degenerative disc disease, lumbar stenosis, and/or spondylolisthesis were treated with anterior or posterior multilevel lumbar spinal arthrodesis. Patients were implanted with a CRS/P spacer placed ventrally into the disc space with a large perforated plate/screw construct anterior and posterolaterally. The follow-up period was a minimum of 12 months, and clinical and radiographic data were collected pre-operatively, immediately post-operatively, and at time of implant removal. Of the 66 spacer-implanted patients, 48 (73%) had CRS/P spacer placement as an adjunct to an anterior approach. The most common diagnoses were degenerative disc disease and lumbar stenosis. Average fusion length was 5.5 levels. No implants migrated, slipped, or broken. All but 2 patients had 5-year follow-up (97.0% follow-up). One surgical complication, a cerebrospinal fluid leak, occurred but resolved with percutaneous drainage. One infectious surgical complication, infected pseudarthrosis, occurred 2 weeks post-operatively. Two other surgical complications, malposition of pedicle screw and sternal screw, occurred. The modified post-operative ODI, ODI-B, and VAS pain score all improved significantly pre-operatively to post-operatively, remaining improved at the last follow-up examination. There were no differences in clinical outcomes between anterior and posterior CRS/P spacer placement. Patients in either the anterior or posterior CRS/P spacer groups reported pain relief. In general, radiographic outcomes were maintained and remained stable throughout the follow-up period.
