Evaluation of clinical features and prognosis for prognostic scores in gastric cancer. Although prognostic models are important in determining treatment strategies for individual patients, very few studies have focused on the significance of these models for predicting prognosis in patients with gastric cancer. The relationships between various prognostic scores and clinicopathologic features or survival were evaluated in 874 patients with gastric cancer. The Kaplan-Meier method was used for survival analysis. Prognostic scores were significantly correlated with lymph node metastasis ($p = 0.000$), venous invasion ($p = 0.000$), and tumor diameter ($p = 0.000$), but were not correlated with patient sex, age, location, histologic type, Lauren's classification, and level of serum carcinoembryonic antigen.
