I am using WSO2 CEP on premise. There's an example on the WSO2 documentation where it's used on-premise services and cloud services for inter-service communication. I need a seamless integration between the cloud services and on-premise services. The cloud services need to be able to receive requests from on-premise services to carry out something. How can I achieve this?

Thanks. A: The WSO2Cloud services allow you to write code to communicate with on premise services and to publish service capabilities (API endpoints) for a given service. I think that you can use any of the clients you prefer for this kind of integration and/or publish your on premise service capabilities to the WSO2Cloud services. I'm making a web application using JSP/Hibernate/MySQL. I have a controller which makes call to a service layer. The service layer uses Hibernate. Now I want to make sure that Hibernate session is invalidated when user clicks Back or Forward in browser. Does anyone know how to do this? A: It should be quite easy: At first: when the request is being executed, store the current session in a variable and invoke close() on it: HttpSession session =...; ... session.setAttribute("session", this.session); Back to Controller: In the first line, retrieve the session from the HttpSession: HttpSession session = request.getSession(); and in the second line, close it: ((HibernateSession) session).close(); And done. For people with weak hearts, these may be life-saving products. But in Costa Rica, access to medical products is a privilege. I am still trying to process the news that the country I call home will not lift export restrictions on medical devices like pacemakers, defibrillators, and breast pumps. Just last night, I was recalling a series of interviews I
