A radioimmunoassay for detection of Helicobacter pylori in gastric biopsies. The detection of Helicobacter pylori (HP) in gastric biopsies usually is based on the urease test and histology, which is an invasive method. We present a radioimmunoassay for the detection of the biomarker HP-16 in stomach tissue. In this assay, the unlabelled anti-HP-16 antibody is bound to microtiter plates by using the streptavidin-biotin complex technology. Only then, the labelled anti-HP-16 antibody is added. The amount of bound labelled antibody is proportional to the concentration of HP-16 in the sample. This method detects 125 pg of HP-16 in supernatants from HP-infected Helicobacter pylori (Hp) mouse antrum-mucosa cell cultures. Results obtained by enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA), Western blotting, HP dot blot, indirect immunofluorescence and HP-16 radioimmunoassay are in good agreement. The specificity of the method was examined using the stool samples of patients with gastrointestinal diseases. Fifty-six stool samples were obtained from patients with nonulcerous and ulcerous gastritis. These were investigated by the urease test, culture, and the radioimmunoassay for HP-16. HP-positive samples were obtained in all nine cases of nonulcerous gastritis but in only 11 of 37 (29.7%) of ulcerous gastritis. Stool samples of patients with nonulcerous gastritis contain a markedly lower amount of HP-16 than samples from patients with ulcerous gastritis. Furthermore, we demonstrate that the results obtained by the HP-16 radioimmunoassay correlate with the presence of H. pylori (P 648931e174

Contacts Sometimes a site may automatically block this "Keep me signed in" option and you will see a window similar to this: This is not our site fault, this is a new thing Microsoft is doing with Windows 10 that they are working to solve. When this happens, the only way to keep using Internet Explorer 11 is to close this window and come back to our site. If you close the window, Internet Explorer should remember you and log you in. But if you don't want to close the window, here are some additional ways to make Internet Explorer remember you. Cookies are small text files stored on your computer and are widely used for tracking and other purposes. They're not evil, but most people aren't very aware of them and how to control them. We can help! As we are working with Internet Explorer, we know this is something that irritates people. That's why we have created a guide on how to set your browser to tell Internet Explorer that it's OK to keep you logged in even if it's not the desired behavior. Please note that if you turn this off, if you have a Microsoft Account you will not be able to do things like use apps, play games, and make purchases in Microsoft Store. Remember the days before the Great and Powerful Oz? You remember the characters, don't you? The Cowardly Lion, the Hungry Tiger, the seven blind Mice, the Golden Fleece, and of course the Great and Powerful Wizard. Why can we tell the difference between the King of the Forest and the Wizard? Well, remember the Wizard of Oz? The Wizard was also a Great and Powerful Wizard, wasn't he? Why? What can you do to make Internet Explorer remember you? If you have an account with the Microsoft Account, then you are all set. Otherwise, you need to sign in with your Microsoft Account. Head to the login page and type in your Microsoft Account credentials. Select your location and then select Sign in. Don't log out yet! Note: Clicking sign in will automatically log you in to the account and you won't have to sign in again. Now that you're signed in, you can start doing some things with Internet Explorer.
